

MANAGING HUMAN BEHAVIOR AT WORK

There is a greater likelihood that leaders know more about how their cars operate, statistics, and other mundane things than they do about what motivates and drives the people who work for and with them. This is definitely not the best of situations for any organization. People, human beings, carry out the tasks, projects, and major strategies in any organization. Yet, how much leaders really know and understand about what inspires someone to get out of bed in the morning and want to go to work. A proper understanding of this can make the difference between frustration and joy, mediocrity and greatness, failure and success.
